SOCIAL JUSTICE & PUBLIC HEALTH CALL FOR SUBMISSIONS

HPHR welcomes research, evidence-based editorials, visual and/or written reflections, and other submissions addressing social justice and public health. We are interested in pieces that leverage innovative theoretical perspectives and methodologies to examine the intersections of social justice, public health, and health-related inequities across issues, such as:

- Disease-specific discrimination
- Inequities across levels: individual, local, state, national, trans-national, and global
- Sexual orientation and gender identity/identities
- Policing and police brutality
- Immigration, migration, and documentation status
- Age
- Social class, mobility, income, and wealth-building
- Job opportunities, workforce equity, under/unemployment
- Substance use, addiction, and harm reduction
- Health and health service delivery
- Education
- Access to technologies and innovations
- Geographic and spatial differences
- Vertical and horizontal health inequities
- Life changes in relation to larger sociopolitical forces: war, pandemics, disasters
- Methodological approaches to studying inequalities/inequities

HPHR will be accepting submissions for this call until Friday, March 5, 2021.
